I'm not really sure if they'll be suitable. The postage is for Christel and Bärbel; they are all common expressions. The rules of the game are as follows: The answer cards are distributed evenly and placed with the English answer facing up. One person takes the question cards and reads them aloud one by one. Whoever thinks they have the right answer reads it out, and then the numbers can be compared. The whole thing is an invention of mine; you can also play it however you want. The toilet paper roll is an idea we got during the holidays. So, now I wish you all once again all the best for Christmas and happy holidays. Warm Christmas greetings from Orli.
